

SUPPORT BEYOND CHILDHOOD

Therapy for Autistic & ADHD Adults

Late diagnosis, burnout, work and relationships: the support that helps grown-ups thrive.

Presentation · 2026

KEY IDEA

It's never too late to understand how your brain works.

A diagnosis in adulthood can bring relief, self-compassion and better support.

Support that helps adults

Affirming psychotherapy

Therapists who understand neurodivergence, masking and identity.

Adapted CBT

Concrete, structured tools for anxiety, habits and planning.

ADHD coaching

Accountability for routines, projects and time management.

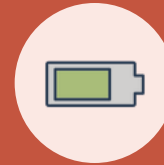

Occupational therapy

Sensory needs, daily routines and workplace setup.

Common goals in adult therapy

- Recovering from burnout
- Managing anxiety and depression
- Executive function at work and home
- Relationships and self-advocacy

Masking and burnout

Hiding traits to fit in takes energy. Over time it can lead to exhaustion; therapy helps people unmask safely and pace themselves.

Getting started as an adult

1

Reflect

Notice patterns across your life.

2

Find an assessor

Choose one who sees adults.

3

Get assessed

Interviews, history and questionnaires.

4

Plan supports

Therapy, coaching or medication.

5

Ask for adjustments

Request changes at work or school.

Key takeaways

- 1 Adult diagnosis is common, and support is available.
- 2 Choose therapists who understand neurodivergent adults.
- 3 Pace yourself: rest and accommodations are part of the plan.

This overview is educational and does not replace advice from a qualified clinician.